

This newly developed personal development programme for women and men working in HE has been piloted around the country during 2007. It is now coming to London in January 2008.

This is your opportunity to experience the 5-day programme:

Maximising
Our Skills
And Inspiring Confidence

The programme is delivered over 5 days, one day a month, from January to May 2008. The 5 days are facilitated by Eszter Molnar Mills, Deputy Staff Development Manager and Matt Levi, Learning and Development Adviser of the University of Exeter and part of the MOSAIC Development Team.

Each day is a mixed learning opportunity of group work, personal reflection and professional tutoring and support. Each module comes with an extensive Work Book with suggestions for further reading or research.

A member of EISA staff who attended the pilot programme has said, "The Mosaic course provided a rare opportunity to think about myself, made easier in an informal and relaxed environment." And a member of Senate House Library staff comments "MOSAIC was informative, stimulating and fun - a perfect opportunity to take time for yourself and to think about your professional and personal needs. The course was also a great way to interact with colleagues from across HE!"

Dr. Stephen E. Tarling, UCL Staff Development Adviser for Research Staff adds: "MOSAIC is designed and facilitated by an outstandingly strong team of the most effective and well-appreciated staff developers in the Higher Education sector - many members of the team are people who I have worked with or for, and who are regularly given the highest ratings by participants in their various programmes. They have put together a most impressive, supportive and comprehensive programme which I would thoroughly recommend."
